The verdict

Your content is invisible to search engines until JavaScript runs, which means most of your pages might as well not exist for Google. That single issue is costing you every search that describes exactly what you offer: a Bhagavad Gita reader with Sanskrit and English, a daily email subscription, a study platform.

Srimadgita.com and holy-bhagavad-gita.org own those searches right now. Someone looking for 'best bhagavad gita app' or 'bhagavad gita email course' lands on them every time, because you have no page for those queries and the ones you do have can't be read.

Fix the rendering problem first; it's an afternoon of work and it will let Google see the site you already built. Then publish a page for each of those missing searches, starting with the ones that mention your features directly. That advantage disappears the moment you publish too, which is the useful thing about this particular gap.

What to fix (5)

WARNING TECHNICAL

1. Your page content only appears after JavaScript runs

We fetched these pages the way a crawler does and got an almost empty shell. Google does render JavaScript, but it does so on a second pass that can lag by days or weeks, and it drops pages that are slow or error out. Anything that matters for ranking, your headings and body copy, is invisible on the first pass.

Fix: Check it yourself: open the page, view source, and search for a sentence you can see on screen. If it isn't in the source, Google's first pass doesn't see it either. Server-render or pre-render the pages you want ranked. In Next.js that means a server component or static generation; most frameworks have an equivalent.

WARNING ON_PAGE

2. 19 pages have no H1 heading

The H1 is the strongest on-page signal of what a page is about. Without one, search engines are guessing at the primary topic.

Fix: Add a single H1 stating what the page covers.

3. 1 title is too short to be useful

You're leaving space unused in the one line buyers read before deciding whether to click. A fuller title can carry both what the page covers and who it's for.

Fix: Expand titles to 30–60 characters.

WARNING TECHNICAL

4. We couldn't find a sitemap

A sitemap tells Google which pages exist and when they changed. Without one, new pages you publish can take far longer to get indexed — which directly delays the payoff from any content you create.

Fix: Publish /sitemap.xml and reference it from robots.txt.

WARNING CONTENT

5. 4 pages are very light on content

With under 300 words there isn't much for Google to understand or rank, and buyers comparing options have little to read before deciding.

Fix: Expand with the problems you solve, who it's for, and the outcomes customers get.

Keywords you don't cover

best bhagavad gita app TRANSACTIONAL

Someone searching for a 'best app' is actively comparing tools and will sign up to the one that feels most complete. You have the content (Sanskrit, English, Nepali, summaries) but no page that frames it as a app-like reader.

bhagavad gita daily email subscription TRANSACTIONAL

This is the exact thing you offer (daily email). A person typing this already knows they want a recurring email, not a one-off PDF. A landing page for this subscription would convert immediately.

bhagavad gita reader with sanskrit and english COMMERCIAL

Specifies the two core features (reader, Sanskrit+English) that set you apart from simple text sites. The query is a feature checklist, and a page that matches it exactly will outrank generic Gita pages.

bhagavad gita nepali translation app TRANSACTIONAL

Nepali is a clear differentiator that none of your listed competitors target prominently. A dedicated Nepali translation page/app could capture an underserved audience looking for exactly this.

bhagavad gita chapter summaries online COMMERCIAL

You have chapter summaries. Someone searching for 'online' summaries wants them in a digital, accessible format, not in a book. A page presenting these summaries as a web resource would capture this.

srimadgita.com alternative TRANSACTIONAL

Direct competitor comparison. Anyone searching for an alternative to srimadgita.com is already using that site and dissatisfied. A single page titled 'Srimadgita.com Alternative' is a low-effort, high-conversion asset.

holy-bhagavad-gita.org vs TRANSACTIONAL

Same logic as above, but for holy-bhagavad-gita.org. The 'vs' search often indicates a user holding two tabs open trying to decide. A page that honestly compares you to them will capture that decision.

bhagavad gita study platform COMMERCIAL

The word 'platform' implies a service, not just a static website. It signals that the user wants a tool to study, which matches your offering of reader, summaries, and daily emails.

bhagavad gita with meaning subscription TRANSACTIONAL

Includes 'subscription', indicating willingness to pay for recurring access. A page that clearly explains the subscription (daily email, meaning) will convert people who are pre-sold on the model.

bhagavad gita email course TRANSACTIONAL

An 'email course' implies a structured program, which is a highly attractive format for spiritual study. This is a direct match for your daily email teaching, just packaged differently. A landing page for this course can capture sign-ups.

What to publish

1. Meditation vs Prayer: What the Bhagavad Gita Actually Says

Srimadgita.com is ranking for 'Meditation vs Prayer: Bhagavad Gita's Approach' and pulling in users comparing these spiritual practices. You have no equivalent page, so anyone searching for how the Gita distinguishes meditation from prayer leaves your site for theirs. This post directly takes that traffic by offering your own take on the topic, backed by your original Sanskrit and translation features.

2. Bhagavad Gita Chapter Summaries: A Complete Guide to All 18 Chapters

'Bhagavad Gita chapter summaries online' is a commercial search with clear intent to study the text. No page on your site targets this, while competitors are capturing users who want a structured overview before diving into verses. This post serves as a hub, linking to each chapter's full content and your daily email course, turning researchers into subscribers.

3. Why a Daily Bhagavad Gita Email Can Change Your Morning

'Bhagavad Gita daily email subscription' is a transactional query from people ready to sign up. You offer a daily teaching but have no dedicated page explaining what they'll receive, how it works, or why it's worth their inbox. This post sells the email course by previewing the daily insights and tying them to your platform's Sanskrit and meaning tools, converting curious visitors into subscribers.
